All laminates are constructed of four layers: wear, design, core and back.

- The wear layer is a clear layer of aluminum oxide that protects against fading, stains and surface burns.
- The design layer contains a high-resolution photograph of the floor's surface appearance and provides you with a variety of looks from the burnished swirls of natural hardwood to the earthen textures of ceramic or stone tiles.
- The core layer is a construction durable high-density board which protects against indentations and moisture.
- The back layer is a stability layer, which protects the planks against moisture and helps balance the floor.

Thanks to layered construction, laminate flooring absorbs the heavy traffic and day-to-day use of an active household, while it continues to look as good as the day it was installed.
